Thoreau once said, "If you have built castles in the air, your work need not be lost; that is where they should be. Now put the foundations under them." As students at Glenville State College, we are building the foundations to go under our "castles in the air." We build our foundations through striving for academic achievement, through learning to concentrate on the studies set before us, through budgeting and using our time, all of which will prepare us for a useful place in society.

We also build foundations through out associations with others. College, no doubt, produces ties and friendships that will follow us the rest of our lives. Here we learn to live with others, to accept others' beliefs and opinions, and probably most important of all, we learn to accept the element of constructive criticism. With the aid of faculty, friends, and many other resources we either tear down old ideas and beliefs and rebuild in their place firm foundations or we reinforce our old ideas and beliefs. We learn to build our foundations of stone, not of sand, so they will be firm and lasting.

To this end, we owe a debt of thanks to the institution that has been built on a firm foundation and that has proved to be true and lasting. From its administration, faculty, and many other facets of learning, we obtain the small pebbles which go into building the cornerstone. In this book, the 1965 KANAWHACHEN, we have tried to portray pictorially a part of the role of the "lighthouse on the hill"--the guiding light in the bricklaying of our foundation for life.

We Dedicate

We, the staff of the 1965 Kanawhachen, dedicate this annual to Dr. Harry B. Heflin. Dr. Heflin served as president of Glenville State College for seventeen years, from 1947 to 1964. During his term Dr. Heflin instrumented many changes which affected not only students and faculty but also the physical structure of the college itself. Our Health and Physical Education Building, Student Union and Cafeteria, Women's Hall, and amphi-theatre were all constructed while Dr. Heflin served as president. He looked always to the future of Glenville State College. Before he left Dr. Heflin initiated plans for an addition to Louis Bennett Hall and a new Robert F. Kidd Library.

Dr. Heflin was well-known for his way with students, faculty, and administrators. In all of his endeavors Dr. Heflin demonstrated his quality of warm friendship which he readily extended to all. With this in mind, we wish Dr. Heflin much success in his new position as Vice President of Finance and Administration at West Virginia University. Again, we dedicate this 1965 edition of the KANAWHACHEN to Dr. Harry B. Heflin.

Student Life

The objectives of Glenville State College are, briefly stated, to provide for the student the elements of a cultural education, a mastery of the fields of concentration, the ability and desire to use methods of critical inquiry both in his academic field and in the acquisition of the knowledge and skills essential to his profession; an understanding of democratic society and a desire to promote it; a well-rounded personality and the ability to help others to obtain such personalities.

Students reach these objectives through scientific study

living with others

and a friendly attitude.

Through such campus facilities as the library, the auditorium, and the student union, students at GSC can broaden their interests and their learning. The library offers students materials to be used for research, for supplementary study, and for enjoyable reading. Students, engaged in various fields of learning, find the auditorium a place of value for presentation of learning, entertainment, and special talents. The student union offers students the opportunity to engage in friendly discussion and to relax for a few moments.

Dr. Max Ward, Chairman, Division of Science and Mathematics, works above and beyond his usual duties of professor of botany at Glenville State College and applies his energies to a unique type of research. The research, in basic botany, aims to uncover things about plants not currently known. At the present time, the work centers around the capacities and activities of the single cell, in ferns and mosses, where these cells may be readily had for study and experimentation. These plants also offer cells and tissues readily adaptable to cultivation in controlled and measurable culture conditions--in glass dishes or tubes, sealed against contamination, yet providing growth conditions which stimulate, as far as possible, many of those in the natural habitat.

Currently, the chief work centers around single, isolated cells of moss callus--or cells which grow and divide continuously but refuse to form organized tissues natural to normal plants. These 'mis-behaving' cells, under current experiments, may be made to organize themselves into tissues and indeed plants of a form not encountered in nature. This control of development results from application of certain growth-controlling chemicals which appear widely in various concentrations in the plant world.

In October and November, 1964, the eighth and ninth articles dealing with these studies were published--one in the British weekly science journal, NATURE, and one in the American journal, THE BRYOLOGIST. At intervals reports on the studies are also presented before meetings of the state and national botanical organizations.

On occasion, a limited number of students in biology take an active part in carrying out certain phases of the experimentation and preparing and presenting the reports. For the past two years Sue Ellen Frederick, a junior in the College, has been closely associated with the research program. She expects to enter graduate school to continue research in botany immediately after graduation.

Professional Distinction

Hundreds of sealed glass test tubes and certain other glass dishes are used for the growth of the plant tissues under controlled conditions. Extreme care, sterile techniques and much time are required to maintain the cultures (view is in special room designed to provide controlled lighting and constant temperature.)

The cultures are inspected regularly--especially the new ones--for any sign of variations in development. Michael Conley here points out a recent development on media containing anti-cancer chemicals.

Other experimentation, especially directed toward students in physiology, deals (as shown here) with the effect of growth retardants and growth accelerators on various plants.

Faculty and Administration

D. BANKS WILBURN, PRESIDENT
Ed. D., The George Washington University

From the President

To Students, Faculty, and Friends:

The challenge of assuming the Presidency of Glenville State College has been all that I expected it would be. It has brought me a deep sense of respect for the earnest endeavors of those who have preceded me in the Presidency. Particularly, I see everywhere strong evidence of the vibrant leadership of Dr. Harry B. Heflin who has given so much through the years to make Glenville State what it is today. Likewise, I recognize the efforts of an able faculty providing students each year with encouragement, guidance, and instruction of quality. Moreover, you, the students, have impressed me with your sincerity of purpose in your eagerness to prepare yourselves for meaningful service. Your search for skills and knowledges, which will cause you to become ably prepared to serve others, challenges the faculty and administrators to provide you an increasingly larger sphere of learning. Finally, if the loyalty of the friends of the College, including alumni, representatives of government, and all citizens, is to continue and be enlarged, it will require planning for the future that will be bold, imaginative, and wise to the end that increasingly larger numbers of youth and adults will have greater opportunities to prepare themselves for useful and rewarding service to others.

Thus, the challenge of the present, as well as the future, rises vigorously before us. It confronts all of us, those who will leave the College this spring upon graduation, those who will continue here either as students, faculty, or administrators, and our friends everywhere. The challenge is to provide stronger and broader curricula and greater devotion to learning that will lead directly to the living of lives that are meaningful to others as well as to ourselves, all of which are necessary if greater stature is to come to education and to Glenville State College.

Sincerely yours,

D. Banks Wilburn
