Heaven or Hell?

Hell is not a place upon which the future has an unpene-trable monopoly. Neither is heaven. Both of these "will be's," are found not only in that "someday" but in any day anywhere. They are not places which are waiting to reward us for our service or lack of such. They are of our own making, bred by our own conscious spirit. As John Milton once said,

"The mind is its own place, and in itself

Can make a heaven of hell, a hell of heaven." In our traditional minds, we look upon hell as death and heaven as life. Hell is a death of, among other things, sensitivity. It represents to us as college students deadened sensitivity toward love, beauty and truth. It is the kind of psychological death we demonstrate so profoundly by our absence from lyceams—our "few and farbetween" visits to the library, our "too busy to bother with" attitude toward our fellow students, our refusal to believe that teachers are something other than inhuman and quite intolerable. When we blind ourselves to the love, beauty, truth, and opportunities around us we are in hell -a self made hell.

Heaven is an aliveness. It is exhibited by many of our students in their selectivity-their ability to put first things first. It is experienced by the student who through his actions exhibits his belief in and search for truth, not only in his subject matter, but in his experience with life. Heaven is experienced by the student who finds enjoyment and understanding of others and self through his interaction with his fellow students.

Glenville College is either heaven or hell to those who make it such. It is what each of us makes it. The opportunities, the love, beauty, truth are here. Look for them and we find a heaven. Blind ourselves to them and it is hell. But let us be careful what we look for, because we are sure to find it. -Joyce Jackson

Opportunity Unlimited!

What part is the library playing in your life as you don the manly armour of scholarship?

Is it merely the extension of study hall from high school days, a good place to relax and rest; or a convenient place to meet a date? We think it is certain that to the unimaginative student the library will forever be a dull place where he is compelled to go, protesting and complaining, in order to meet the requirements of a class assignment.

An old Chinese poet, Yuan Mei, once wrote in a poem en-titled, "In An Old Library,"

- Ten thousand tomes with pendant discs of jade, Bowls of old Shang with bronze of Chow displayed,
- And suddenly the small
- Tinkle of girdle gems floats through the hall, As though the wind custodian sings:
- "I guard the fragrance of a thousand springs. Draw near!
- Ten thousands yesterdays are gathered here."

The library can be the place, or better still, the arena where the student meets and grapples with great ideas-great ideas from the books that line the shelves and fill the stacks, for as Carlyle reminds us: "In books lie the soul of the whole past time-All that mankind has done, thought gained or been-Lying as in magic preservation in the presence of books.'

During your college career you will undoubtedly be confronted many times with the statement; the library is the heart of the institution. The type of education you desire will determine to a great extent your interpretation of this statement One of the major discoveries which you must make for yourself is simply this: that the only real education is self-education. -Connie Sams
