Concern: For Campus Rules

College rules and regulations are necessities if the col-lege is to function efficiently. These rules and regulations exist for the purpose of bettering college life rather than spoiling good times or inhibiting the students. If rules are not maintained, the overall structure of the campus deteriorates. Many rules governing dress, traffic and parking are ignored and disobeyed. Some students appear in the Library, Administration Building and Student Union in improper dress. Shorts and slacks have no place in the Library nor Administration Building. They can not be properly worn in the Student Union on Sundays. Neither is a raincoat a proper substitute for a dress in the cafeteria nor in classes. The GSC campus is a community within itself. As such.

The one particular point where I feel I have fallen short is read-ing. This has been perhaps as much my own fault as any one else's. It was not until recently that I realized just how deficient

A test in a book on reading sud-denly opened my eyes. On this speed-reading test, I read 175 words per minute. The average high school graduate should be able to read 300 words per min-ute. My reading speed leaves something to be desired.

What really astounded me was that I am a college senior and did not fully realize my inability to read effectively. This realization makes me question how I could have gotten this far in our educa-tional system with a handicap such as this.

It is my conviction that there should be a better testing program to screen out and aid poor read-ers. This program should begin in the first grade and continue

In recent weeks I have made a through college. At the college sincere effort to evaluate what or where my 16 years of public help poor readers and improve schooling have left me. I found, good readers. needless to say, many good points and a few not so good. Any average college student should attain a minimum of 500

Any average college student should attain a minimum of 500 words per minute. I believe it is imperative that such a program be initiated here at Glenville. Without such a program, the world of literature is virtually closed to many potentially good students.

Another complaint I would reg-ister is the lack of exchange of worthwhile ideas here. This ex-change would take place between students and faculty. Are we as students and you as faculty mem-bers so totally indifferent to in-tellectual exchange? Questioningly.

Questioningly, Keith C. Smith

Pioneers Beat Salem, Fall Before Fairmont

By CHUCK EDDY

By CHUCK EDDY On Oct. 18 the Pioneers battled Salem College down to the final gun and came out on top 14-13. The win left the Pioneers in conten-tion for the WVIAC championship.

On Oct. 26 the Pioneers were in Fairmont to tangle with the Fair-mont Falcons. It was a dismal Saturday afternoon for Coach Lil-ly's players; the Falcons defeated the Pioneers 14-13. If the Lillymen had won the contest, they would have definitely been undisputed Conference champions.

On Saturday night, Oct. 26, Sa-lem played West Liberty and tied the Hilltoppers 13-13. The tie would have given the champion-ship to the Pioneers if they had beaten Fairmont. the sould
