Eight GSC Students Doing Teaching To Meet Special Educ. Requirements

This summer eight Glenville Students are doing student teaching in order to meet state certification requirements in Special Education. These students have come from a wide variety of places throughout West Virginia and have had a wide variety of experience. According to those enrolled in the program, one of the major benefits of the Special Education Program, aside from actually working with the children, has been the sharing of these experiences and educational methods and materials.

When the Student Teaching Program in Special Education at Glenville began three years ago, there were only three people working in it and twice that many the second year. Also of emphasis is the fact that, previous to this year, all enrolled in the program were graduates of Glenville State However, this summer many of those in Special Education are graduates of

Art Students Visit Annual W. Va. Fair

Monday, July 2, some interested members of the art department, under the direction of Mr. Charles Scott, attended the W.Va. Arts and Crafts Fair. A bus left GSC at 8:30 a.m. for Cedar Lakes, and after a day of standing in line, the students returned at about 7:00 p.m. While at the fair the students heard Dr. Patrick Gainer from Tanner lecture on appalachian music. During his talk at the heritage tent he demonstrated playing different instruments

Mr. Scott's class is presently doing a project with paper straws, and they saw a variation of the same project at the fair. Arts and crafts of every kind were displayed, including Mr. Scott's own craft display.

Students enjoyed the fair thor-oughly, but they complained that the tents were mislocated because they would be hearing a speech or watching a demonstration and guns would go off, making it impossible for them to hear. Also, the musicians appeared to be quite lazy, as they talked among themselves neglecting to demonstrate their instruments. The ice cream was worth standing in long lines, students

Denion Delighted Over Blackout But Questions Facts & Monsters

Dear Editor.

I hope that you will print this for the sake of Glenville's student body. They have a right to know!

I wish to comment that the article in the last Mercury about the blackout was delightful to read and relaxing to my nerves. But that's about as far as it goes. I'd like to ask Mr. Cuppett about a few things.

Concerning nuclear war, isn't Norfolk home of intricate naval operations, "southwest of Glenville"? And why would anyone want to blow away Charles-

Isn't the fire alarm system in the bank operated by batteries? The electricity came back on before anyone really though about actually "swiping the stoplight."

The matter I most want to ask you about, Mr. Cuppett, concerns this socalled Gilmer County Monster. You seemed to be pretty certain about its existance even though you doubted everything else. I was wondering if you could produce some evidence for this (uh) monster, because no-one I've talked to has even heard of it. And finally, are you sure this (uh) monster wasn't just a fig-

Ode to a Bookstore: Inventory Opening

Inventory Sale are words frequently found in newspapers and stor dows around January 1 and July 1. These words tell three things. The first is that inventory is being taken. The second is that they are trying to move merchandise and there will be bargains. The third is that the store will be open to customers, which gives me my idea.

Never have I heard of closing a store for inventory, even for a couple of hours. Most stores find if they have to have their inventories in privacy, they make their employees work on Sundays. You see, the motto of most stores is "The customer comes first," "The customer is always right," or something along the line of the priority of the customer's desires and needs.

Enter the Glenville State College Bookstore. Now, if a customer of this establishment has a test at 12:30 and discovers that he needs a pen at noon, he soon finds that he is up the legendary brown creek without a paddle if the bookstore is closed. The bookstore, which was recently closed for inventory, has caused inconvenience for their customers, and bookstores, like all other stores, should realize that they cannot operate without that Almighty Customer and His All Powerful Dollar.

I suggest that from now on, when inventory must be taken, that it be done while the store is open, or after its regular hours. Perhaps the "powers-that-be" in the bookstore did not realize that they were inconveniencing their all powerful dollar by making people come at a later date. I know they must have had a reason for closing thebookstore; I just hope it was a good one. When a store is closed during regular hours, it alienates customers and makes them angry. Alienated customers do not exactly keep the money rolling in, especially when the bookstore charges full retail prices on most items. I wonder how much of a markup that is, anyway,

Therefore, bookstore, you have us up that deep brown creek, without our paddle. But we do not have to buy your greeting cards, tee-shirts, and stationery. We might not get GSC beer glasses anywhere else, but we will get the same quality at a lower price elsewhere. Alienation does not sell those post-cards of the Glenville Normal School.
