New PR Director Ms. Nasia Pavlidies

New PR Director Named

Ms. Nasia Pavlidies, 22, formerly of Charleston, has been named Director of Public Relations and Alumni Affairs at Glenville State College. She assumed her duties on Friday, November 16.

A Dec. 1978 graduate of West Virginia University, Ms. Pavlidies holds a B.S.J. degree from the P.I. Reed School of Journalism and is presently pursuing a Master's degree in Industrial Relations there. She has been employed at the Daily Athenaeum, WVU's newspaper; the State Department of Highways, where she served as public information officer and most recently Southern West Virginia Community College in Logan, where she served as assistant to the president.

The new director stressed her objectives for alumni affairs to concern streamlining the office to get more graduates involved in the Association. She would like to establish strong active chapters throughout this state, especially in the panhandle area, and in adjoining states as well. She hopes to raise more monies to help students through alumni scholarships.

As far as public relations is concerned, Ms. Pavlidies may be our best supporter. She stated that she "loves the area, and the college people are outstanding - they really care." She encourages visitors to come to her office, and urges all college personnel to inform her of news events, meetings, and/or honors so that she can arrange for releases and coverage.

Hopefully, her work will be simplified by the establishing of a more thorough news service bureau for the college. She also hopes to establish a Speakers' Bureau, or Monthly Forum. She plans to contact public education television for a weekly show, and to encourage public service announcements concerning the college. A Spring Supplement is also planned as a newspaper insert for a nine-county area.

A member of Public Relations Society of America, International Association of Business Communicators and West Virginia Communicators, Ms. Pavlidies traveled with the WVU Men's Swim Team to some fourteen institutions on the Eastern Coast as Sports Publicist for the university newspaper. She also served as facilitator for a conference at Furman University on "The Use of Graphics and Increasing College Enrollment."

The combined Alumni - PR office is located in the old Alumni office, in the Pioneer Center, across from the bookstore.

Support Your Local Birdwatchers

I recently picked up one of those 70's memorable issues that Time, Newsweek, Life, and other publications have issued. In it were the predictable assortment of photographic memorabilia and quotable quotes that made the 70's the 70's. Among the quotes, one that stuck out was made by Glenn Kimble, director of air and water resources, Union Camp Corporation in 1970. He said, "I wonder whether mankind will suffer a whole hell of a lot if the whooping crane doesn't quite make it."

Now, everyone has the right to his or her own opinion. He also has the right to his own stupidity. But one must seek to obtain moderation and I fear Mr. Kimble has overrun his own bounds. The statement is a gross example of the selfish, narrow minded attitude that many people, people living only for today have. So what if the whooping crane vanishes, he says. So what! No greater loss could be imagined.

I am not an overbearing conservation zealot. I prefer to think of myself as a conservationist who realizes further confrontations between the mechanics of civilizations and the purity of nature are going to demand a compromise on both sides. But when the onslaught of man threatens the existence of a unique species of life than I don my scabbard and take up the fight.

Many people point to the extinction of the passenger pigeon and other species and defy any evidence of monumental adverse effects. How do you explain to these people that there will never be another passenger pigeon flying in the skies. And it's not theoretical, emotional sentiment by a bunch of weeping birdwatchers. Instead it is a physical loss for all humankind, a loss we simply cannot afford, now more than ever.

Note Of Appreciation

Dear Editor:

Congratulations on the Mercury's birthday. To print the news from Glenville State College, for such a long time, is an achievement in deed. I sincerely thank you and your sponsor for inviting me. It was very kind of all of you. As I was not present, I not only missed a friendly party, I also missed seeing some lovely people who I have known over the years.

Keep on printing the news of the campus in the splendid way in which you are doing it now.

Wishing the Mercury many more happy birthdays.

Sincerely,
