Nursing Program Awarded

A cooperative agreement between Glenville State College and the West Virginia School of Nursing will result in better trained health care professionals for central West Virginia residents.

A four-year, fully-accredited nursing program jointly sponsored by Glenville and WVU received the green light from the West Virginia Board of Regents on Tuesday, March 6.

"Glenville has been interested in providing a program that would improve the health care situation in this part of the state," Glenville President William K. Simmons said. "There is a critical shortage of nursing professionals in rural West Virginia. Through this cooperative agreement, Glenville and WVU will be assisting to alleviate the shortage of nurses in this area."

The program has received federal funding from the Title III Higher Education Act and will become fully operational effective the fall 1984 semester. "We are anticipating at least 16-24 students to enroll for the fall semester," said Dr. I.D. Talbott, director of resource development at Glenville. "Of all the programs I have been involved with, this particular program has generated the most interest. The requests for information about this nursing program has been overwhelming," he concluded.

A needs analysis was conducted early in the planning stages and revealed that the pay scale in central West Virginia hospitals was higher on the average than in West Virginia's urban hospitals in Charleston,

Art of Fooling Teachers Outlined

Any student who has had to sit through more than an hour of lecture at one time knows the value of learning to fool his teachers. The art of looking like you are paying attention when you are not has been mastered by college students across the world in an attempt to keep in school. Without acquiring this skill, there is no doubt that many accomplished students would have been on the suspension list. Learning how to fool your teachers is not a complicated process. It can be studied in five phases:

1. Always sit in the center of the room, if possible. A student who sits in the outer seats of a classroom is usually the prime target for being called on by the teacher. It is best to sit about mid-way back and slightly off to the right so you can get lost in the shuffle of papers and feet.
2. Never volunteer answers or comments when you are paying attention. It is likely the teacher will remember you and will be apt to call on you in a tight spot. Remain anonymous.
3. Learn to sit in a studious position. The best way to do this is to cover your eyes with your hand, head tilted downward, place your elbow on the desk top, and open your book in your lap. This will appear like you are searching your text for an answer or pondering the teacher's last thought-provoking comment. In this position, you are able to avoid answering questions, daydream, or sleep. Make sure you have the right book.

There is a subpart to this point. Sometimes a student will be trying to pay attention but will have no idea what the teacher is talking about because he didn't do the assigned work. The way to look like you really know what you are doing is to adopt a posture that says, "I know exactly what you are talking about." Lean slightly forward in your chair, resting your elbow on your knee and your chin on your hand. Nod every now and then but never complete eye contact with the teacher. He may call on you.

4. Never dress like a punk rocker in class, even though it may be your style. This elaborate fashion of dressing would make you a permanent fixture in your teacher's eye, and you could never be anonymous again. Conservative dress is best.

5. Learn to sleep with your eyes open. Children often do this but most lose this capacity by about age six. If you can regain this skill, you can sleep through your classes all day long. One word of warning, however: carry eye drops with you and use periodically to avoid eye damage due to excessive drying.

If you follow these six simple steps, you, too, can be a master at fooling your teachers. This is not suggested as a daily procedure, as it can be hazardous to your grades, but it does require some practice to maintain. It can come in very handy on days when you are not prepared for a detailed class discussion because you have burned the midnight oil for some perfectly justifiable reason. It is wise to be cautious, however, on whom you use this technique. You could get ahold of a teacher who was once himself a master of the art and who first formalized the steps of fooling his teachers.

Democratic Candidates Narrowed

Super Tuesday has come and gone, and the list of candidates for the Democratic presidential nomination has been narrowed to three. Walter Mondale, Gary Hart, and Jesse Jackson remain in the race for the right to represent the Democratic party.

The so-called Super Tuesday helped create less of a circus atmosphere for the remainder of the battle for Democratic supremacy. George McGovern and John Glenn both wised up and withdrew rather than waste more time and money. Perhaps Jesse Jackson should do the same, but he has vowed to remain until the bitter end.

Mondale and Hart appear to be the frontrunners, although some predict that Jackson will be the survivor in the end as Mondale and Hart neutralize each other. As of Monday, Mondale held 525 delegates, Hart had 317, and Jackson 62. A total of 1967 delegates is needed for nomination. Hart's recent swing of momentum brought him closer, but it may not be good enough.

Meanwhile, as the three Democratic candidates are battling it out, President Ronald Reagan is patiently waiting in the wings in hopes of reelection in the November general election.

Whatever happens, things could become very interesting in the upcoming months.

Zoologists Visit Elkins Site

On February 24, 25, and 26 the Glenville State College field zoology class in the Division of Math and Science conducted their research in the Bowden Cave System near Elkins, WV. This Randolph County Cave is located in the base of Greenbrier Limestone and is at the west end of an old quarry at Bowden, WV. Bowden Cave is an alteration of rooms and passages. Several branches develop toward the rear of the cave.

The GSC speleologists studied the variety of cave organisms in Bowden Cave. Bats, spiders, cave crickets, wood rats, mice, and salamanders are a few of the types of organisms found within the cave. The team also conducted measurements of the physical environment of the cave including zonation and temperature determinations along with soil and water quality tests.

On Saturday, the Glenville crew assisted in the rescue of three individuals who had been trapped in the cave for over twelve hours. The reward for this good deed was a supper that evening consisting of that Appalachian delicacy - ramps.

This is the first of three research field trips planned. The March research station will be located in Pocahontas County while Dolly Sods in Tucker County will be the site of the final study. At the conclusion of each field project, each student is responsible for a scientific paper reporting the findings at each study site.

Male Thinclads To Open Season

The 1984 version of the Glenville State College Pioneers men's track squad, under the direction of head coach Jerry Milliken, will kick off its season on Saturday, March 24 at the Huntington Early Bird Relays.

Milliken's young squad features 15 first year competitors, with only four seniors (Steve Keenan, Scott Pottmeyer, Mark Price, and Larry Taylor). The rest of the team consists of Mark Aldridge, Dave Antonik, Darryl Brill, Gary Brissey, Robert Brown, Jerry Burkhammer, Robert Castro, Eric Chico, Calvin Coleman, Barry Crutchfield, Dave Darst, Robert Flynt, Forrest Hall, Don Harding, Chris Harnett, Rick Haught, Loring Hudson, Melvin Jackson, Trent King, Todd Raines, Shawn Shockey and Lloyd Willis.

Coach Milliken is optimistic about the season in general, but is a bit worried about the inconsistency in practice caused by the weather to this point. Commenting on the meet Saturday, Milliken stated, "It is within their grasp on paper, but what they do this week and Saturday will tell the story."

The GSC men finished second behind West Virginia State at the last season's conference championship meet in Glenville. Milliken is looking forward to having his team compete against State this season.

State will compete at Huntington this weekend. Other schools which normally sport teams there are Marshall University, West Virginia University, Kentucky State, Indiana, PA, and Ohio University. Milliken stated, "They always get real strong competition there."

Milliken is being aided in his coaching duties this season by assistant coach Earl "Whitey" Adolfson, whom he called "a big plus."

Results of the squad's performance at Huntington and the season schedule will be printed in next week's Mercury.

Butch Hays has been named to replace Jim Hilgenberg as GSC cross country coach.

Hays Selected As Coach

Glenville State College athletic director Jesse Lilly announced last week that Butch Hays has been named to fill the position of head coach of the GSC cross country team. Hays will take over the position vacated by Dr. James F. Hilgenberg. Hilgenberg recently resigned the position after coaching the squad for six years and leading it to three consecutive conference championships and subsequent trips to national tournaments.

Hays is well known in the track and field circles in West Virginia. He is active as a track and field official, is president of the Kanawha Valley Track and Field Officials Association, and will serve as the assistant director of the 1984 West Virginia High School State Track and Field Meet.

Hays is a Glenville State College graduate and he received his masters degree from Marshall University.

Financial Aid Undergoes Changes

*Editor's Note: The following story was compiled by the Action Committee for Higher Education, a coalition of Washington-based higher education groups that serve as an information clearinghouse on U.S. student aid programs.)

President Reagan's fiscal year 1985 budget shows a slight increase for higher education—on paper. Actually, this is entirely attributable to a $584 million increase in the estimated cost of the Guaranteed Student Loan Program (GSL).

Otherwise, the budget would cut some $460 million from higher education programs, just about what Congress added last year. Most of the cuts (about $330 million) would come from student aid under a proposed pruning which would slash 913,000 awards to undergraduate and graduate students.

The Action Committee for Higher Education, a coalition of Washington-based higher education groups that serve as an information clearinghouse on U.S. student aid programs, noted that a recent College Board study reported an alarming 21 per cent drop in the value of student aid from fiscal year 1980 to fiscal year 1983. Despite a reversal of the trend by the fiscal year 1984 appropriation (which cut the loss to 19 per cent), the Reagan budget would accelerate the erosion of need-based aid to 26 per cent since fiscal year 1980. Pell Grants would be maintained at the fiscal year 1984 level ($2.8 billion), increasing the maximum award from $1900 to $3000 but restricting eligibility of middle-income students to target aid to the neediest.

The College Work-Study program would be increased 53 per cent, to $850 million. To offset this increase, however, no funding is requested for the Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grant program (SEOG), currently $375 million; the Direct Loan program, now $161 million in federal capital contributions; the State Student Incentive Grant program, $76 million; and graduate fellowships, $14 million. The TRIO programs, which provide vital services to encourage college attendance and retention of disadvantaged students, would be cut in half from $165 million to $82 million.

Guaranteed Student Loans (GSL) would be revised to require a needs test for all recipients, now only required for applicants with family incomes over $30,000.

Another $50 million in cuts are proposed for categorical support, including the elimination of foreign language and area studies, aid for research libraries, cooperative education, and several other smaller programs.

Higher education programs account for $6.8 billion, or 44 per cent of the federal Education Department's $15.5 billion budget. This is about the same percentage as in fiscal year 1984, when higher education received $6.7 billion of a $15.4 billion budget.

There will be a meeting of the GSC Week Committee on Tuesday, March 27 at 12:30 p.m. in the Little Theatre. Hopefully, plans for the week-long celebration will be finalized at this time, so committee members are urged to attend.

A new program feature this year will be an Idea Exchange, in which professors share ideas on teaching writing. There will also be informal poetry readings and microcomputer demonstrations.

"English professors from around the state have come to Jackson's Mill each spring and fall since about 1950 to hear papers and talk about the teaching of English in West Virginia," Dr. Tedford stated. Other GSC professors who have been presidents of the organization are Dr. Espy Miller, Dr. William K. Simmons, and Dr. Chris Orr.

The movie, "That Championship Season," will be shown tonight at 8 p.m. in the auditorium.

Deaths Noted

Two former GSC instructors, Mrs. Lillian Chaddock and Mr. Kenny Joe Smith, passed away recently.

Mrs. Lillian R. Chaddock died Sunday, February 26 after an extended illness. Mrs. Chaddock was a Home Economics instructor at GSC for 24 years, teaching from 1950 to 1974. She was an honorary member of the Home Economics Sorority, National Phi Upsilon Omicron, honorary member of Kappa Delta Pi, and the West Virginia Retired Teachers Association. She earned her B.S. degree from West Virginia University in 1938. Mrs. Chaddock was 72 when she died.

Kenny Joe Smith, 44, of Harman, WV, was a Political Science instructor at GSC during the 1971-72 academic year. He also taught several extension courses. Mr. Smith, who died in an automobile accident on Friday, March 9, was graduated from GSC in 1969 with a B.A. in Social Studies, then completed his M.A. at WVU in 1970.

Nursing Program.....

Huntington and Morgan-sing on a rotational basis.

At the conclusion of four years of nursing education, students will be awarded the bachelor of science in nursing degree jointly by both institutions.

"This is the culmination of four years of negotiations with the School of Nursing and other agencies," said Dr. Talbott. "The WVU School of Nursing has been most enthusiastic about this effort in providing qualified health care professionals in central West Virginia, especially the dean of the school, Lorita Jenab, who is a Clay County native," Talbott commented. "She really understood the critical need of nurses in our area."

Talbott provided an explanation of admission to the nursing program. The first semester of the freshman year is considered a pre-nursing major. In the second semester of the freshman year, students will make formal application to the nursing program. Upon acceptance, students will be in the fully accredited program for the duration. Applications for the first semester, pre-nursing program are available in the Office of Academic Affairs on the Glenville campus.

The new program meets the requirements of both schools and is fully accredited by the West Virginia Board of Examiners for Registered and Professional Nurses and the National League for Nursing. Additionally, the West Virginia Department of Health and the West Virginia Nurses Association has endorsed the cooperative nursing program.

Registration is currently underway for the fall 1984 semester in pre-nursing at Glenville. Registration details may be obtained from the Dean of Admissions, Mack K. Samples, Glenville State College, Glenville, WV, 26351, 304-462-7361.

Huntington and Morgan-sing on a rotational basis.

"There is significant demand in the rural areas for nurses, more so than in urban." Dr. Talbott explained. "The competition among nurses is far greater in Charleston or Morgantown, for example, than in Gassaway, where Braxton Memorial Hospital is located, or in Webster Springs, where Webster Memorial is located. The need to attract and employ qualified licensed nurses accounts for the elevated pay scale in central, rural West Virginia."

Simmons explained the value of the program to be in the financial savings. "We are taking a much needed program and implementing it without expansion of any physical facilities, thereby utilizing all of our existing resources on campus and in our geographical region," he explained. "This is the real beauty of the nursing program. The only needed resources are qualified faculty."

In the program proposal to the Board of Regents, both institutions requested an increase in funding for eight faculty positions, one of which Glenville will receive in the form of a nursing coordinator for the Glenville campus. State appropriations for this program will be phased in as federal funds are phased out over a three- to five-year period.

The newly-developed cooperative program for Glenville and WVU will accommodate a range of 16-24 students each academic year, averaging a total of 80 students when fully operational in four years.

Students admitted to the program will receive the first two years and one summer's education, including clinical experience, on the Glenville campus. The final two years' training will be at the Charleston Division, WVU Medical Center.

Clinical experience in Glenville will utilize the Glenville Health Care Center and the Stonewall Jackson Hospital in Weston. Faculty for the clinical experience will be provided by the WVU School of Nur-

Submissions to the TRILLIUM may still be made to any staff member or Mrs. Keating. Artwork and photography are especially needed.
