A Black History Month Tribute Celebrated Afro-Americans

Alice Walker

by David Graham

Alice Walker is among American's most popular black authors.

Walker, born February 9, 1944, in Eatonton, Georgia, she was the youngest of eight children. "I was the last child," she says, "And my mother didn't really want eight children, and she didn't really bite her tongue about saying that."

She remembers that she always had a knack for writing even as a young child. "I came into this lifetime already writing and thinking that I had written before." The seeds of her female point of view were shown early on in her youth. Where Alice grew up, the boys were dominant, and the girls were restricted to only domestic duties.

In 1961, she attended Spelman College and then transferred to Sarah-Lawrence College in Bronxville, New York.

She later traveled to Mississippi to work with the voter registration drive. There she met a white lawyer named Melvyn Leventhal. They married in 1967 and had one daughter, Rebecca.

The Leventhals were the only interracial couple in Mississippi in the late '60s and the stress of the situation resulted in a divorce in 1976.

Alice Walker's pinnacle came in 1983 when her novel The Color Purple, won a Pulitzer Prize for fiction. The Color Purple has been translated into twenty-two languages and has sold over four million copies.

Hand in hand with popularity came the critics. Walker was criticized severely for her feminist view. She has even been accused of attacking the black male. Walker insists that she is not attacking all men. The critics has labeled Walker a fire-breathing feminist but she prefers the word "womanism." She says, "I feel safe with women, no woman has ever beat me up, no women has ever made me feel afraid on the street. I think that the culture that women put out into the world is safer for everyone."

Walker has written an impressive body of work. She has to her credit sixteen books including five novels, several collections of essays, short stories, children's books, and poems in which she has tackled such topics as spouse and child abuse, fear of death, female sexuality and incest.

Her most recent novels, The Temple of My Familiar and Possessing the Secret of Joy have both had successful stays on top of the New York Times best sellers list.

Alice Walker is breaking racial barriers in a time of racial tension, with her novels providing an education for the masses in black culture.

In My Opinion . . .

Kibitz Responses Echo '40s Sentiment

The responses in "Campus Kibitz" to Wes Gladwell's question "How do you feel about President Clinton's proposal to allow gays to serve in the armed forces?" (Mercury, February 2) are reminiscent of the obsolete thinking of an earlier era. Below are the same statements rewritten to reflect the debate over President Truman's decision to integrate the military in the late 1940s [changes in brackets].

Response #1: "I'm in the Reserves, and I'm totally against [Blacks] and [whites] have never been able to work together in the military, and they never will."

Response #2: "Soldiers are forced to live under conditions that are not conducive to [interracial] behavior and, therefore, could put a strain on the military well-being of the country."

Response #3: "I feel that the men in the service shouldn't have to be put through the trouble of having [blacks] in there with them (like sharing bunks, duty, etc.)."

Response #4: I don't think it's right. I don't see how [racial] preference could effect job performance, but I wouldn't want to be a [white] person in an army of [blacks]."

We heard the same discussions regarding women in the military. These arguments are all old, stale material used to deprive people of civil rights in past eras. None of them hold up under close scrutiny. There is simply no valid reason for barring anyone from the military for the reasons suggested.

I was fortunate in Vietnam to know a gay medic who crawled through a rice paddy under heavy enemy fire to drag a wounded GI to safety. I will assure you that the GI who lived after being riddled with Viet Cong bullets was not asking if the man who saved his life was straight or gay.

The only adjustment required for gays in the military is for all soldiers to understand that sexual harassment of any soldier whether heterosexual or homosexual will not be tolerated in the United States Armed Forces.

Continuing Education

Life is a Good Choice; Why Waste It?

Are you a perpetrator or a victim? I think we are all victims here. Why must people behave like animals? Animals fight to survive; we don't need to fight. We don't need to kill or hurt someone to go on with our daily lives. What ever happened to the ideal of PEACE?

People don't like the idea of fighting just as birds don't like the idea of having no oxygen or whales no water. And love with no one to feed on. Why is color a stipulation? It doesn't matter if you are white, black, blue, yellow or purple. We are human beings, or am I mistaken?

We could act like the typical human beings and blame our behavior on the media, how we were raised or how we're treated. So if we know we blame our behavior on this, why can't we change it? I know you can't very well change the way you were raised but you can change how you're treated. If you treat people the way you want to be treated, then maybe we can achieve PEACE!

Life is a beautiful wonder. Why waste it?

Accounting Students Offer Tax Assistance

The Glenville State College Student Accounting Society is again sponsoring a Volunteer Income Tax Assistance (VITA) program. VITA offers free aid in filling out federal and state income tax returns. The aid is given by accounting majors who are IRS-trained volunteers. The service is offered in the second floor conference room of the Robert F. Kidd Library on the Glenville State College campus through April 15. The hours are as follows:
Mondays, 2:00 to 6:00 p.m.
Tuesdays, 2:00 to 6:00 p.m.
Thursdays, 4:00 to 8:00 p.m.

Fourteen GSC accounting majors are involved in this project. Each student is required to complete the Volunteer Assistors Guide and pass a test with at least an 80 percent which is graded by the IRS.

This tax service is offered to GSC students, faculty, staff and community members who have basic tax returns. The VITA volunteers do not handle complicated tax matters or prepare business returns.

Cheryl McKinney, business professor and Accounting Society adviser, stated, "The students have basic tax training that allows them to assist tax payers in their returns."

VITA offers these students valuable experience which is an asset during an interview. McKinney commented, "I am extremely proud of these students who have taken the time to advance their level of professional knowledge."

Editorial - Gays in Uniform

Gay-rights activists for years have been fighting for discriminating policies to be done away with so gays may serve in the military. Newly inaugurated President Bill Clinton is taking a stand by supporting gay-rights activists. As a matter of fact, Clinton gave his position on gays in uniform during an appearance at Harvard's Kennedy School of Government in October 1991 and said he would immediately overturn the ban in the military once in office. At the time this was only a mild remark, but his opinion in motion will create discord among Americans.

Activists have a right to be angry. Even if gays serve in the military and keep their sexual preference secret, they still face the risk of being discharged from rank if the secret is ever revealed.

The military's ban on gay militants is unconstitutional. One's personal life has no bearing on how well a professional job will be performed. Discharging a militant for his sexual preference is like not hiring an applicant because of marital status or age.

Although Clinton wants to immediately overturn the present policy, he must take into account the cost and controversy it will bring.

Movie Review

The Bodyguard

by Todd Pettit

I walked into the theater knowing three things about "The Bodyguard": one, Whitney Houston makes her film debut with Kevin Costner, playing a singer/actress (gee, what a stretch); two, Whitney bellows out "I Will Always Love You," as if six times per day on the radio wasn't enough; and three, Costner has the buzz from hell. I came out of the theater in pretty much the same state of confusion.

Houston plays Rachel Marron, a gorgeous, rich, talented singer turned Oscar-nominated actress. At various times she dressed like she's on LSD. One day she's Cleopatra, the next Josephine Baker, the next a robot in a helmet and metal bustier. Despite all her obvious attributes, Marron comes from a dysfunctional background--she has a moody 8-year old son, a jealous sister, and two deranged madmen out to kill her. Not exactly an episode of "Lifestyles of the Rich and Famous," is it?

Marron's an retentive PR (Gary Kemp) hires a bodyguard for protection; enter Frank Farmer (Kevin Costner), a Terminator-type, consummate professional who's clientele includes ex-President Ronald Reagan. "But Reagan was shot," snaps one of his detractors. "Not on my shift," quips Costner, between dodging Marron's amorous advances and bullets.

"The Bodyguard" is not so much an interracial love story as a shoddy romance. Questions are raised in the juiceless script and never answered. (Why is Marron ready to leap Farmer's bones at every opportunity? What happens to the first psycho?) But through several flashy scenes, Costner and Houston manage to connect romantically. No mean feat, considering they alternate between primness and giddiness at inopportune times.

What will Houston do when she's faced with a dramatic roll that doesn't require her singing voice? She's a natural, but only as a sweetly innocent siren. Costner is reliable, a stalwart force through a string of impressive blockbusters, but his peeled onion, skinhead look and onscreen stiffness should be left to Schwarzenegger.

As dull as "The Bodyguard" is, it has star charisma. Sometimes, however, there's got to be a plot involved.

Institutional Legislative Committee to Meet With State Legislature

by Todd Pettit

"The student is a consumer, and the consumer is being taxed heavily," says Dr. William Simmons, member of the Institutional Legislative Committee (ILC). An offshoot of the State College System of West Virginia, the ILC works to increase statewide funds for higher education. According to Dr. Simmons, schools systems have had some success, but are still understaffed, overworked and overcrowded.

West Virginia is one of 15 states in the Southern Regional Education Board (SREB), which includes the most poverty stricken regions in the country. Despite this fact, Simmons says that West Virginia students pay more tuition than most students in the southeastern part of the U.S. and do not reap the benefits.

"As higher education funds decreased, the government dug deeper into students' pockets," Jim Hilgenberg concedes state youth. In attempt to increase statewide understanding about higher education, the ILC has made several trips to Charleston to parley their ideas to the Legislature, but Hilgenberg admits their message often gets lost in a storm of controversies. When media coverage is often restricted to abortion and other larger, louder groups, Hilgenberg says, it's hard to get on the 6:00 evening news.

There are, according to the ILC's statistics, 80,000 college students in West Virginia and all pay more far less than many of their neighbors. The ILC works to change legislation for the needs of higher education. As Hilgenberg ponders, what good are college funds for the construction of academic buildings and salaries for state employees if a student cannot afford an education?
